In many places the stores could be reached only by making a long detour to find one of the temporary crossings, and then surmounting a ridge of dirt on the sidewalk high as the merchant's windows-a ridge from which dry weather grought dust clouds and rains carried mud ankle deep to his door. No wonder that resilents of adjacent streets were in despair and "To Let" signs soon decorated shops along one of the finest of the city's thoroughfares.

It is only recently, with the completion of the roadway in great part, that the process of filling in the trench and clearing away the surface has been undertaken. And yet Mr. McDonald artiessly tells us that the from Forty-second street to Union square

That official complexities, causing serious confusion, exist between the offices of Bornugh President and Commissioner of Public Works and the innumerable and long continued delays in making repairs to asphalted theets follow as a matter of course.

This is the statement of the Grand Jurg in an additional presentment handed up yesterday on the wretched condition of the city's asphalt pavements. It is not apparent why there should be any "official complexities" between the President and a Commissioner whom he appoints and can remove at pleasure a Commissioner to whom the charter gives "cognizance and control of paving, repaying, resurfacing and repairing of all streets." The presentment further declares that

It seems inconcelvable that with many thousands of open holes in our asphalter streets and the number constantly growing there is no power on the part of the city officials to compet repairs to be made by the companies whose contract obligations should require them to do the work, or else that the Department of Public Works should not be able itself to do the work promptly an charge the cost to the delinquent companies. That hits the mark!

He speaks of decent government and non-partisan administration in the same sentence, and announces his purpose to uphoid both. He must be aware that he cannot sustain them by merely saying so. His great task will be to bring the organization of which he is now the official head to a realizing sense of the value of both principles."
